

For Immediate Release:

Checco Services Inc. offers FREE licensing for its bioChec™ keystroke biometrics technology.

2006-10-15, Stony Point, NY - Checco Services Inc. will offer its bioChec™ Keystroke Biometrics Engine and Software Development Kit free of charge. "The bioChec™ technology has such incredible flexibility in the multi-factor authentication market, every customer brings a new and unique use for keystroke biometrics in their space," states CEO John C. Checco. "As a result, our business is becoming increasingly service oriented." Checco Services will continue to provide the development community enhancements to the bioChec™ keystroke biometric technology, while focusing on commercial and GSA support for the SDK, customization and development services. The pay-for-support model has been successful with companies such as SendMail, MySQL and JBoss. "The timing could not be more perfect for this type of opportunity," says Checco, "With the advent of multi-core processors and the upheaval in software-licensing policies, the bioChec™ team wanted to offer its customers another choice. It's a bold move." The decision to move away from the complexities of licensing models could be the differentiator for companies such as bioChec™. Elimination of technology licensing will resolve many issues for enterprise virtualization efforts. Providing integration and support services on a demand basis creates a manageable solution set for small-to-medium businesses needing multi-factor authentication to comply with regulatory guidelines established by the FFIEC.
